

Trudy (Milkweed Prize for Childrens Literature)

Trudys having a hard time at school: math class isnt going well, and her best friend, the one she pinky-swore she would always be friends with, has found a new group to hang out with. To top things off, her parents are old really old and while she loves them with all her heart, she dislikes it when other people mistake them for her grandparents. When Trudys father starts acting strangely, Trudy and her mother cant figure out what the problem is. But when he forgets to pick Trudy up from school and starts to put groceries away in the wrong place, they decide to take him to the doctor. Once Trudys father has been diagnosed with Alzheimers, Trudy and her mother are faced with some tough decisions. This is a touching, beautifully told story that young people relate to, particularly those who have parents or grandparents dealing with an illness. Trudys challenges and her strength in dealing with them make her a heroine with whom young readers identify.
